What will become of Europe and the UK under potential Brexit scenarios? Led by Mai’a K. Davis Cross, Edward W. Brooke Professor of Political Science, this pop-up coincides with the anticipated departure of the UK from the European Union on March 29th, 2019.

Through two intensive workshops on campus (Sunday, February 23rd and Saturday, April 6th), and Skype participation in events led by faculty experts at London’s New College of the Humanities (March 17th and 29th), participants in this class will:

- Learn about the background to and significance of Brexit;
- Follow the transition with experts as it occurs in real time;
- Discover the methodology of scenario development, which posits that if decision-makers have access to a range of scenarios, they are more likely to notice and be prepared for a diverse range of alternative futures;
- Complete the experience by engaging in team-based scenario-building to anticipate future developments for Europe.

For more information, contact Professor Cross at m.cross@northeastern.edu. Students from all majors and colleges who want to learn more about this major geopolitical event are welcome! Nor prior experience or knowledge is necessary.

Please note that students taking this course as an overload will be billed the cost of one credit.