"This class seems unique [international]? I agree, including students such as [NABU]. Growing from there, studying NABU's role in international security is something there was a major connection. I was also able to see how international theories I've studied played out amongst actual diplomats and military officials."

I worked with colleagues from Italy and some members from 10 different countries where intercultural differences were present. I also had to work around language barriers and use many online tools to work with respect. I was able to challenge many problems and have very thoughtful discussions with many senior members in many topics that give advantage to education.

Working in the US required extensive and strenuous travel. The organizations made very high security protocols and extensive background checks for attendees to enter the stage. I had to make sure my work was being received by only those I intended and that I wasn't oversteering with friends, family or colleagues. I also had to maintain a level of neutrality as these were more formal events where I had to give and accept condolences and high ranking officials.
